Passion for Philanthropy

Daniella believes in the essential role of nonprofits in transforming communities. Her passion for philanthropy stems from her lifelong connections to giving and her inclinations as an empath. Daniella is driven to partner with dynamic teams to forge lasting change.

Experience

Daniella is an enthusiastic, tenacious, and organized professional who brings an inquisitive spirit and inventive approach to each project. Daniella has developed a suite of skills in project management, writing, and research. In her past roles, she has brought poise and adaptability to the everyday balance of exceeding goals within deadlines. Daniella has worked with staff and clients at all levels including c-suite executives, high net worth individuals, and volunteers.

Most recently, Daniella assisted with the Archdiocese of Charleston’s Bicentennial Campaign, creating volunteer engagement materials as the campaign reached half of its $60 million goal. She also supported efforts for several CCS client organizations, including Habitat for Humanity, Catholic Charities Washington DC, Roland Park Country School, the American College of Cardiology, and the Virginia Theological Seminary’s Bicentennial Campaign.

Prior to joining CCS, Daniella held roles at contemporary art galleries in New York City and Philadelphia, handling client engagement, research, and sales support. In addition, she consulted for experimental art galleries, advising clients in setting goals, creating content, and implementing process improvements. Her responsibilities ranged from managing monthly email campaigns to planning for long-term growth.

Personal

Daniella was born and raised in rural Pennsylvania and lives in the Mt. Airy neighborhood of Philadelphia. In her spare time, she is a creative writer and home-cook hobbyist. Daniella loves to read short stories, visit museums, and hike local trails.
